IMAGINATION THEATRE

Defeating Negative Beliefs

Most problems we face in life originate from our beliefs. Think of the negative belief that you no longer want.

How does this make you feel?

Next, study the 6 features above from your "Theatre" and note each that applies to your image. Example: Is it a movie or a picture, color or b/w?

Since you're the director of your Theatre, change any 2 of the features.

Example, if it's large, make it smaller by pushing it farther into the background. If it's color, change to b/w.

Review your production 10 x's rapidly.

Notice that the negative feeling is gone (or reduced significantly).

Influencing Mechanisms

Commitment & Consistency:

A series of small commitments over time will produce a belief that those commitments were worth making (whether they were or not).

Social Proof:

If others are doing it, it must be the thing to do. Get people talking about what you are promoting.

Reciprocation:

When we do small things for other people it creates a need to return the favor. It may not be proportionate, so recognize this when others offer favors.

Liking:

We do things for people we like, and we like people for strange reasons. So think long and hard about why you are motivated to like someone before you engage them.

Scarcity (we want what we can't have):

and others feel the same way. If you want to create demand, just make the social proof big and the supply small.

Contrasting (start high and settle in the middle):

Create situations that live at the very edge of your worst case scenario. That way a relatively small achievement is more readily accepted.

Give A Reason, Any Reason:

People are more likely to agree with a request if they have a reason to do so. Remember that it doesn't have to be an important reason, it just has to be a reason . Never forget to say "because."

Authority:

Or perceived authority is incredibly important. If you are tying to make a point, reference someone of authority who agrees with you.

Subliminal Commands

Body Language:

Watch out for gravity: How we carry ourselves is one of the best indicators of mood. Where a person is carrying their shoulders, corners of their mouth, eyes, etc. tells us how they are feeling. If you see gravity pulling on these areas you should recognize the persons negative disposition.

Paralanguage:

Remember how you say something is often more meaningful than what you are saying. Remember to isolate important words with inflection, and a pause to ensure they are understood.

Metamessages:

Keep your tone and rhythm in sync when you speak unless you want to infer a different meaning. This that can be either a useful tactic or a problem when people misread what you are trying to say.

Embedded Commands:

One of the most effective communication tools is to break your statement into areas of emphasis. Within a sentence, focused words that are elevated in tone while altering a facial expression indicate importance. Combine this with a thought provoking contrast against what others would do and you are likely to gain compliance.

Rhetorical Devices

Indirect References:

Use metaphors and simile's often to provoke thought within your conversation.

Repetitive Context:

Using alliteration (repetitive sound), and phrases that repeat the context of your message is critical in getting your point across.

Communication

Congruency:

OTHER

- The most important thing you can do in communication is maintain congruency between your vocal, verbal, and body language.
- Establishing a consistent baseline with those you are communicating with. This will allow you to effectively bring attention to important phrases when you deviate from your baseline.
- Recognize that your posture, breathing, and tone must match the context of what you are saying.

Use Body Language:

- 1. Smile Everyone likes a great smile.
- 2. Make eye contact Be sure of yourself.
- 3. Use gravity defying posture.
- 4. Move forward Get in the mix, don't watch from the outside.
- 5. Lean in Show interest by slightly leaning in.
- 6. Uncross your arms and legs Be open.
- 7. Be animated Show the other person you are paying attention by using gestures.
- A subtle touch A pat on the arm or a handshake goes a long ways to improving rapport.

Analyze What You Say To Yourself:

Are you saying realistic things about yourself to yourself? If you are not then change it! Be positive about yourself and others will follow suit.

The Art Of Conversation:

- 1. Ask meaningful questions. "What's it like to do your job?"
- Listen and repeat what others are saying. Give feedback, ask questions, and be genuinely interested.
- 3. Give a little personal insight and history, and be authentic, BUT DON'T EMBELLISH!

CHANGE

Since all problems originate from our beliefs, imagine a belief that negatively interferes with your life.

How does this make you feel?

Next, study the 6 features above from your "theatre" and note each that applies to your image. Is it a movie or a picture, color or b/w, loud or quiet?

Since you're the director of your theatre, change any 2 of the features. Example, if it's large, make it smaller by pushing it farther into the background; if it's color, change it to b/w.

Review your changes 10 times rapidly.

Notice the negative feelings. Are they gone or reduced significantly?

ATTENTION!

OBJECTIVE 2 TO REMEMBER:

Commitment & Consistency: A series of small of commitments over time will produce a belief that those commitments were worth making (whether they were or not).

Social Proof: Most believe that if others are doing o it, it must be the thing to do, regardless of stupidity. ろ

Reciprocation: Doing small things for other people creates a need to return the favor. Be careful when others offer favors.

Scarcity: we want what we cannot have, and others of feel the same way. Demand is always proportionate to the hype; it's linked to the limited supply or limited timeframe / deadline.

Contrasting: starting big in order to settle in the middle creates artificial situations that do not exist, like overpricing an item of interest. That way, a relatively small compromise feels like a win when it's not.

Give A Reason, Any Reason: People are more likely to agree with a request if they have a reason to do so. It doesn't have to be an important reason, it just has to be a reason, like using "because."

Authority: Perception is incredibly important. If making a key point, reference someone of authority who agrees with you.

Body Language: How we carry ourselves is one of 照 the best indicators of mood (e.g., our shoulders, 그 corners of our mouths and eyes, etc.). If gravity is > pulling on these, recognize a negative disposition.

Paralanguage: Remember how you say something is often more meaningful than what you are saying. It isolate important words with inflection and/or a pause to ensure they are understood.
